In 1957 after a century of scathing debates and threats of provincial separation Ottawa finally tackled the dangerous fiscal inequalities among its richer and poorer provinces. Equalization grants allowed the poorer provinces to provide relatively equal services for relatively equal levels of taxation. The Art of Sharing tells the dramatic history of Canada's efforts to save itself. The introduction of federal equalization grants was controversial and wealthier provinces such as Alberta – wanting to keep more of their taxpayers' money for their own governments – continue to attack them today. Mary Janigan argues that the elusive ideal of fiscal equity in spite of dissent from richer provinces has helped preserve Canada as a united nation. Janigan goes back to Confederation to trace the escalating tensions among the provinces across decades as voters demanded more services to survive in a changing world. She also uncovers the continuing contacts between Canada and Australia as both dominions struggled to placate disgruntled member states and provinces that blamed the very act of federation for their woes. By the mid-twentieth century trapped between the demands of social activists and Quebec's insistence on its right to run its own social programs Ottawa adopted non-conditional grants in compromise. The history of equalization in Canada has never been fully explored. Introducing the idealistic Canadians who fought for equity along with their radically different proposals to achieve it The Art of Sharing makes the case that a willingness to share financial resources is the real tie that has bound the federation together into the twenty-first century.

Section 27 - With reference to the provision, No commission shall be allowed or received on any assessments of local or special county school taxes, we desire to call attention to the fact that. Under the present Revenue Act the duties of the assessor have been considerably increased without commensurate compensation. In all counties but two (Jefferson and Montgomery) the assessor is compensated by fees, and in our Opinion it is vital that adequate pay be given. With development of methods the office becomes increasingly important, and aside from the fact that the official should receive fair treatment, adequate compensation will always attract efficient men. On the other hand, -where it is denied, even with intention of relieving expense upon a worthy fund, the losses under insufficient administration may overbalance the saving of commissions. We further recommend that the assessor be allowed compensation equal to that allowed the collector. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
